Santa Fe Reflections

Synopsis

250 glorious, colorful images reflect Santa Fe's year-round appeal in a fresh look at this historic and modern destination. See the city streets where monuments and architecture recall the past. Outside of town, mountains, trails, chapels, and fields of flowers beckon your exploration. Visit many summer festivals that celebrate the cultures that mix in the region and rodeos that continue the activities of cowboys and Old West life here. Many artists now call Santa Fe their hometown, because the stimulating region and active markets invigorate their work. Meet Zozobra, a jovial 50-foot-tall marionette, at Las Fiestas de Santa Fe in early September. The useful Resources section includes contact information for many of the museums, festivals, activities, and recreation areas of Santa Fe. This book is a wonderful introduction as well as a souvenir to Santa Fe's many charms, and will be a guide and a keepsake to visitors and locals alike.

Customer Reviews

Steve Larese is a journalist, photographer, and adventure seeker who has written much about Southwest activities and people. He lives in New Mexico.

I plan to give it as a gift to a friend who will be visiting Santa Fe in a few months.

Exquisite photographs following the seasons of Santa Fe. We have been to Santa Fe many times, and this is a beautiful representation of the city and surrounding area. Highly recommend!

This is a beautiful "picture" book. The photos are organized by season and they are spectacular. It's the perfect coffee table book.

Lovely book depicting one of America's most peaceful and spiritual cities ever. Makes me want to retire to Santa Fe. Perhaps someday...

Steve Larese is a journalist and a photographer. He has put together a lovely and loving photographic essay about Santa Fe. There are 250 full color images, arranged somewhat loosely by season, and including to nearby sites such as Ghost Ranch and El Santuario de Chimayo. Steve's writing style was recently on display in the "American Way" magazine, which I read on my flight to New Mexico: "As we survey the ponderosa pine-ÃfÃ- studded canyon beneath us, time seems to stand still. I chuckle to myself, because on this trip through the Land of Enchantment, I've been acutely aware of the passage of time. New Mexico this year celebrates a century of statehood (President William Howard Taft signed the proclamation Jan. 6, 1912). As we explore ruins that go back millennia, built into a landscape a million years old, near a place that changed the world forever, 100 years seems like a moment ago. But the clock soon starts again because Kat has a spa appointment at La Posada de Santa Fe Resort & Spa, where we're staying tonight. Taking one last lingering look, we begin the hike back to our car at Bandelier's newly remodeled Depression-era visitor center." Easy going, aware of everything around him, cutting to the essence with a smooth style -- all that, but when it comes to photography his technique is superb and the quality of images in this fine book are fully realized. This is very much a coffee table book, one that will grace people's homes in Santa Fe or back home, as far away as New Jersey in my case. A beautiful reminder of a beautiful city. Robert C.
