Out Of Shadows (Costa Book Award – Children's Book Award)

Synopsis

Twelve-year-old Robert Jacklin comes face-to-face with bigotry, racism, and brutality when he is uprooted from England and moves to Zimbabwe with his family. Robert is enrolled in one of the country's most elite boys' boarding schools. Newly integrated, the school is a microcosm of the horrible problems faced by the struggling new country in the wake of a bloody civil war. The white boys want their old country back and torment the black Africans. Robert must make careful alliances. His decision to join the ranks of the more powerful white boys has a devastating effect on his conscience and emerging manhood.

Customer Reviews

This book is almost always in action so it is good for readers who love to be reading exciting books. The only objection I have to this book is all the cussing. If you have a rule against cussing then I strongly advise that you don't read this book. Although it's a great book and fun too.

It is a sad commentary on humans. Interesting to see how people of that time period and that place (Zimbabwe) thought & lived.

What would I have done in that situation? Take a good look at yourself and wonder. Very well written; compelling story.

A devastating story that pulled at the depths of my compassion. Wallace explored the human ability to survive against the odds and the ways we devise to cope. When pushed far enough humans are capable of doing things we wouldn't imagine. Wallace brings this all out in the painful story of youths placed in an impossible, but plausible environment. I could taste the depression. There seemed no relief. The time was during the political shift of power from white supremacy to a black president following the 1980 civil war in Zimbabwe. The country's culture didn't change fast enough and the effects of the war devastated the psyche of a boarding school there. Alliances built between young men, naturally and due to the war, had consequences no one should be required to confront. It's a story of the dark side of humanity. I hurt for protagonist and antagonist. It depicts a painful, but educational experience of the effects of racism on both sides of the divide and down the middle. It reminds us we are acting in compliance by not acting at all. I hated knowing, but was compelled to read. It left me informed, introspective and sad. I only gave it four stars, because I couldn't stand to feel the pain rereading it and five stars is my indicator of what I may reread.

I picked up this book looking for something light, having just ploughed through "Pilgrim's Progress". But in fact, no. This book was heavy for a different reason altogether. It follows a teenager as he grows up in a private high school in the newly independent Zimbabwe. Son of a British diplomat, his father sees Robert Mugabe as a great and magnanimous leader. The Zimbabwe born friends in school have different opinions. This book is a tense novel, set in frightening times. There are plenty of racist attitudes on display by characters in the book, but in fact it is about much more than racism. This is a book about power and politics but more especially about hatred and strife in all walks of life, and where it leads. This is definitely a book to make you think. I found it in the young adult section, but it is just as much a book for old adults too. Too heavy for younger children though.

A boy (the protagonist) who becomes an expert shooting guns and pistols the very first time he tries it is pure fantasy. That he at the same time learns to ride a motorbike without any training, also not to believe. Though a readable drama with engaging characters. Good beginning and dramatic end.
